¹The BBC produced "Secrets of the Coach" in August 1993 which featured, amongst others, two Canadian athletes. These same athletes appeared on the Canadian "Fifth Estate: Crossing the Line" three months later. As one of them explained, it took telling her story to the British media, to realize that she was finally ready first to tell her parents and then to talk with Canadian media about her sexual abuse experience while a member of the Canadian national team.

²Smith said that the hip rotations would burn off fat. He also participated to reduce fat on his upper thighs. (Edmonton Journal 1993a).

³These were presented by me to this nationally organized committee on December 2, 1993, exactly one month after the airing of The Fifth Estate program "Crossing the Line." Included in the national group are the Canadian Sport Council, CAAWS, Sport Canada, the Canadian Professional Coaches Association, the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union and representatives from National Sport Organizations.

JOANNA M. WESTON

Naked

A woman sleeps naked
 in a teardrop,
 breasts puckered
 by cold
 as the tear falls
 past her thighs,
 spills over knees
 washing her feet
 with a sigh,
 for it had held her
 completely.
 She is revealed,
 curved in sleep
 as her skin forgets
 the passage of grief.

Joanna M. Weston lives beside a lake with her three sons, husband, and tortoiseshell cat. She has three chapbooks out, one short one, Cuernavaca Diary, and Seasons.

Winter Sports in the West

edited by E.A. Corbet and A.W. Rasporich
 $11.95 paper • ISBN 0-929123-01-8
 Index, photos, 148 pages

Ten essays on the history of winter sports in western Canada from the earliest times to present. Of special interest is the essay on the Edmonton Commercial graduates:

"As an exceptional athletic team, the Grads earned a legitimate place in the annals of sports' history; as a Canadian women's phenomenon, they merit the attention of women's historians."
